

Bernadotteskolen- The Bernadotte School

Education is about human possibilities and therefore needs vision. However, educators often tend to become too fascinated by ideas, that is, preconceived schemes or notions – conservative or progressive – of what children should be like, thereby overshadowing the reality of what they are. In this sense, idealism is the cardinal sin of educators.

Educational quality certainly means academic achievement, but not exclusively. It also means creative and social achievement in the broadest sense. This ideal can only avoid being idealistic, in the negative, dogmatic sense of the word, if it is approached in a democratic atmosphere of mutual respect among children and adults, and within the framework of a democratic organizational structure. In the context of schools, the single most important precondition for this is the ability to “see” reality. “Blind” teaching is bad teaching. The kind of vision most called for is therefore not a vision of “a land that we dream of,” not “somewhere over the rainbow,” but a vision of the world that we live in.

The pedagogical and educational principles and methods with which we work must always be set in relation to reality, and only then do the labels of a progressive or alternative schooling have meaning. Here we touch upon what was the inspiration in the formation of Bernadotte School: The courage to face reality in all of its reflections and expressions.

About us

Vestforbrænding is Denmark's largest waste management company. Each year we handle around 1 million tonnes of waste and our focus is on the resource value of the waste – whether it is materials for recycling or fuel for energy production. All our activities have an environmental certification and our job is to deliver waste solutions that balance environment, service and cost. Our 330 employees service a total of around 900,000 people – this is one sixth of Denmark's population. In addition we service around 60,000 businesses.

Old control room

What happens when you hand over its soda boxes for recycling and what does it mean to the environment?

What processes are there in the combustion plant and what do we do with the smoke and the remnants of the combustion?

Why do we deposit waste and is it forever?

Why should any waste be specially treated and what happens to it?

Økosamfundet Dyssekilde

In the north of Sealand, between Frederiksværk and Hundested you find one of the oldest eco-village in Denmark

Since the early nineties, where the place was just a potato field, we have built a vibrant community where we live and work, focusing on social interaction, tolerance, respect, sustainability, and ecology.

On these pages you can read about how we live and how we have chosen to solve some of the problems that face us all in this day and age.

We hope we can rouse your curiosity, answer your questions and inspire you.
